The time will soon come when singing will be regarded as one of the great helps to physicians in lung diseases in their inciplent state. Almost every branch of gymnastics is employed in one way or another by the dectors, but the simple and natural function of singing has not yet received its full meed of attention. In Italy, some years ago, statistics were taken which proved that the vocal artists were especially long lived and healthy, under normal circumstances, while of the brass instrumentalists it was discovered that consumption never claimed a victum that the vocal artists were especially long lived and healthy, under normal circumstances, while of the brass in-strumentalists it was discovered that strumentalists it was discovered that consumption never claimed a victim among them. Those who have a tendency toward consumption should take easy vocal exercises, no matter how thin and weak their voices may seem to be. They will find a result at times far surpassing any relief afforded by medicine. Vocal practice, in moderation, is the best system of general gymnastics that can be imagined, many muscles being brought into play that would scarcely be suspected of action in connection with so simple a matter as tone production.
